A.

Basis for Humanistic Education and Humanistic Constitution

To achieve a holistic alternative, it is essential to cultivate the right understanding among individuals, guiding them to live in harmony and develop the necessary skills for practical application. The first step is a transformation in education towards a humanistic approach, which emphasizes understanding harmony across all levels of existence, not just academic skills. Humanistic education aims to instill values and skills that enable individuals to meet their physical needs sustainably and ethically.

At the core of humanistic education is the inculcation of understanding at four levels—from the self to the broader existence. This approach fosters self-exploration and continuous self-evolution while recognizing the universality of ethical conduct. The ultimate goal is to cultivate value-based living that contributes to collective happiness and prosperity.

The educational journey begins at home, where children learn through their immediate environment. As they grow, they require formal education that integrates value education into the curriculum. Long-term, a comprehensive redesign of the education system is necessary to embed the principles of humanistic education.

In addition, a humanistic constitution is vital for guiding the development of an integrated human society and promoting a universal human order. This constitution should prioritize ethical conduct and social justice, addressing the divisions created by caste, creed, and nationality that lead to conflict and misallocation of resources.

Instead of perpetuating cycles of violence and injustice, the focus must shift towards nurturing human consciousness and understanding. This resolution is essential for addressing conflicts at all societal levels. A humanistic constitution will outline fundamental rights and duties, ensure justice, and promote global interconnectedness, starting from the family as the basic unit of society to a broader world family.

The vision of a universal human order entails harmonious living across five dimensions: education, health, production, exchange, and justice. By organizing from the family level to a global community, society can function effectively through representative bodies guided by right understanding. In contrast to the current fragmented state of nations, embracing a universal human order based on harmony will enable societies to thrive collectively, using contemporary knowledge and skills for the greater good.
